The phosphoglycerate mutase (EC 5.4.2.2) gene has been cloned on a multicopy vector of Escherichia coli K-12. The gene was sequenced and the mutM gene, which encodes the enzyme, has been found to be encoded by a 6.6 kb sequence of DNA. A mutM+ mutation has also been isolated and shown to be located within the PQM locus on the F factor (D.L. Relman and J. Taylor (1971). Proc. Nat. Acad. Sci. USA 68, 2247-2251) (see accompanying paper in this issue). We have detected mutM+ revertants of strains containing the PQM mutM+ and its suppressor mutants, sPQM mutM+ (derived by amino acid substitutions at position 26) and sPQM(A26D). This has led to the conclusion that the mutM mutation is located either in the 28% G + C content of the coding sequence, or in the non-coding sequences required to transcribe it.Q: Why is it not possible to thread a variable of type IO?
